A PARTY OF EXPEDIENTS.

The spirit which moves a democrat to rejoice over the result in Maine is born of the same motive which led that party to nominate Greely and Hancock for the presidency. Greeley had exhausted the vocabulary of emphatic epithets in his denunciation of the party-had said that the very essence of democracy was "to love rum and hate niggers"-did not entertain views on a single political question in harmony with those entertained by democratic leaders; had been the active, vigorous, persistent opponent of democracy all his life, and yet as a matter of expedience, the democrats made themselves the laughing stock of the world by naming him as their candidate for the highest office in the nation. It is very little better in the case of the democratic party. The party General Hancock. He has no reputation except what he made fighting in the war of the rebellion, against the democratic party south the general election. party for the last twenty years shows most conclusively that it is trol of the government, and there is no feature in that history that shows this more emphatically and conclusively than this alliance in Maine.

It shows, that no prostitution of principle is so low, as to awaken a sense of shame in the bosom of a democratic politician. The spirit which animates the party in Maine, with which the democracy have united, is the same spirit that animates that portion of the democratic party in Tennessee which is supporting Wilson, and which proposes to rob nine-tenths of the creditors of the state of Tennessee owes them.

It is the same spirit which animated a democratic, repudiation member or two ago to observe in language more emphatic than polite: "D-n

Wilson spoke on the 14th inst.

Wright whether or not he would veto a bill passed by the legislature, for the settlement of the state debt, with the provision that it should be ratification before becoming opera-saying that he "would veto any bill that was unconstitutional, and he believed that bill would be unconstitutional." It appears from this that the Memphis Ledger and Avalanche reported him incorrectly in a speech he made at Memphis with Judge Hawkins soon after he was nominated, or he has changed front.

We are glad that Judge Wright has come out that way. That is the true ground, and state credit democrats could afford to support him on no other. If he had occupied the position credited to him in his first Memphis speech, he would have been, to our mind, little better than Wilson. Some of the papers that have been supporting him under-
